The book begins with a brief overview of the Italian Campaign, setting the scene for the armored warfare that would take place. The author then examines the various types of armored vehicles used by both sides in the conflict, including tanks, self-propelled guns, and armored cars. He also discusses the tactics and strategies used by both sides in the employment of their armored forces.

The book is divided into four chapters, each covering a different phase of the Italian Campaign. The first chapter covers the Allied invasion of Sicily in 1943. The second chapter covers the fighting in mainland Italy from the landings at Salerno to the capture of Rome in 1944. The third chapter covers the fighting in northern Italy from the Gothic Line to the final push into the Po Valley in 1945. The fourth chapter provides a brief overview of the armored warfare in the Italian Campaign, drawing on the lessons learned from the fighting.

Armoured Warfare in the Italian Campaign 1943–1945 is a valuable resource for anyone interested in the history of armored warfare or the Italian Campaign of World War II. The book's combination of rare photographs and detailed captions provides a unique insight into this important aspect of the war.
