In the rugged and unforgiving terrain of the American Southwest, where the unforgiving sun beat down relentlessly and the vast wilderness stretched as far as the eye could see, there lived a woman who dared to defy the constraints of her time. Ethel Jackson Price, a pioneering woman of indomitable spirit, left an indelible mark on the history of Fort Huachuca, a military outpost that played a pivotal role in the Apache Wars.

Born in 1843 in Missouri, Ethel Jackson Price was a woman of remarkable courage and resilience. In 1866, she married Captain William Price, a Union Army officer who was stationed at Fort Huachuca. Undeterred by the dangers that lurked outside the fort's walls, Ethel Jackson Price embraced her new life with enthusiasm. One of the most significant contributions that Ethel Jackson Price made to Fort Huachuca was her work with the Apache women and children who were held captive at the fort. She tirelessly advocated for their well-being, providing them with food, clothing, and medical care. She also taught them

English and helped them to adapt to their new surroundings. Her compassion and understanding earned her the respect and affection of the Apache people, who came to see her as a true friend and ally.

In addition to her work with the Apache, Ethel Jackson Price was also a tireless advocate for the rights of women. She was a founding member of the Fort Huachuca Women's Club, which worked to promote education and social welfare in the community. She also served as the fort's postmistress, a position that gave her a unique opportunity to connect with the soldiers and civilians who passed through the fort.

Ethel Jackson Price's legacy extends far beyond her time at Fort Huachuca. She was a true pioneer, a woman who dared to break down barriers and defy the expectations of her time. Her life is an inspiration to all who strive to make a difference in the world, no matter how small or seemingly insignificant their actions may seem.
