In her new book, Twilight of Democracy, Anne Applebaum argues that we are witnessing a dangerous trend towards tyranny around the world. She identifies a number of factors that are driving this trend, including the rise of populism, the decline of trust in institutions, and the increasing polarization of society.

Applebaum argues that populism is a major threat to democracy because it undermines the rule of law and the separation of powers. Populist leaders often claim to be the only ones who can represent the people, and they use this claim to justify their own authoritarian rule.

The decline of trust in institutions is another major factor that is driving the rise of authoritarianism. As people lose faith in their governments, they are more likely to turn to strongman leaders who promise to restore Free Download and security.

Finally, the increasing polarization of society is making it more difficult to find common ground and solve problems. This polarization is often fueled by social media, which allows people to retreat into their own echo chambers and reinforce their own biases.

Applebaum warns that if we do not take action to address these trends, we could see a return to the dark days of tyranny. She calls for a renewed commitment to democracy and the rule of law, and she urges us to resist the seductive lure of authoritarianism.
