Historical Origins

The roots of the Geomantic Tarot Spread can be traced back to ancient Mesopotamia, where Babylonian astrologers and diviners employed a method known as geomancy to decipher the will of the gods. Geomancy involved casting a set of 16 dots or lines on the ground, with the resulting pattern forming a figure that held symbolic meaning. These figures were then used to answer questions, make predictions, and guide decision-making.

Over time, geomancy spread throughout the Middle East and Europe, eventually merging with the tradition of tarot card reading. In the 19th century, the French occultist Papus published a seminal work outlining the Geomantic Tarot Spread, which brought this ancient practice to the attention of a wider audience.

The Geomantic Figures

The Geomantic Tarot Spread consists of 16 figures, each of which corresponds to a specific element, planet, astrological sign, and personality trait. The figures are arranged in a 4x4 grid, with each row and column representing a different elemental force: earth, water, air, and fire.

The figures are:

- Puer (Earth) - The Child
- Puella (Water) - The Maiden
- Fortuna Major (Air) - The Greater Fortune
- Fortuna Minor (Fire) - The Lesser Fortune
- Acquisitio (Earth) - The Acquisition
- Amissio (Water) - The Loss
- Laetitia (Air) - The Joy
- Tristitia (Fire) - The Sorrow
- Conjunctio (Earth) - The Conjunction

- Separatio (Water) - The Separation
- Rubeus (Air) - The Red
- Albus (Fire) - The White
- Populus (Earth) - The People
- Via (Water) - The Way
- Caput Draconis (Air) - The Dragon's Head
- Cauda Draconis (Fire) - The Dragon's Tail

Creating the Geomantic Tarot Spread

To create the Geomantic Tarot Spread, begin by shuffling a deck of tarot cards. Then, cast a set of 16 dots or lines on the ground or a piece of paper, using a random method such as tossing coins or rolling dice. Interpret the resulting pattern using the Geomantic figures described above.

Next, select four tarot cards to represent each row and column of the grid. These cards will provide additional insights and context to the interpretation of the Geomantic figures.

The completed Geomantic Tarot Spread consists of a 4x4 grid with 16 Geomantic figures and 16 tarot cards.

Interpreting the Geomantic Tarot Spread

Interpreting the Geomantic Tarot Spread involves a combination of intuition, knowledge of the Geomantic figures, and an understanding of the tarot card meanings. Each figure and card in the spread contributes to the overall interpretation, providing a multi-dimensional perspective on the querent's situation.

The position of the figures and cards within the grid also holds significance. The top row represents the past, the bottom row the future, the left column the subconscious, and the right column the conscious mind.
